CHILTON, WISCONSIN—A new line of specialty malts from Briess Malt & Ingredients Co. offers brewers more options for formulating seasonal beers. The new Briess Maltster's Reserve Series is a line of seasonal specialty malts. It features a rotating schedule of seasonal specialty malts, each available for three months for the next season's brews. The Maltster's Reserve Series is a permanent addition to the Briess product line.

The Maltster's Reserve Series debuts with Caracrystal® Wheat Malt, a caramel wheat malt applicable to all beer styles using caramel malts and particularly well suited for summer and fall brews. Caracrystal® Wheat Malt is available now through March 2010. After that, it will be available every January-February-March. New seasonal malts will be announced by Briess throughout 2010.

Maltster's Reserve Series malts are handcrafted specifically to help brewers expand their offering of seasonal brews. Because these specialty malts are made in the U.S.A. from North American malting barley and Wisconsin wheat, they also offer a greener approach to brewing craft beers.
